MRS. ELINOR M. LANE DEAD IN THE WORLD OF SOCIETY

NOTED AUTHORESS EXPIRES WHILE TRAVELING.
Remains Brought to Former Home in This City, Where Funeral Will Be Held.

Mrs. Elinor MacCartney Lane.

Mrs. Elinor MacCartney Lane, novelist, died at Lynchburg, Va., last night. She had been ill for several days and was on her way south with her husband, Dr. Francis R. Lane, to recuperate her health. The body, accompanied by Dr. Lane, arrived in Washington this afternoon. The funeral will be held from the home of Mrs. Lane's aunt, Mrs. James Wilkinson, 1445 Q street.

Elinor MacCartney Lane was the youngest child of Nicholas and Elizabeth Means MacCartney and was born in Maryland about forty-five years ago. She had lived in Washington from early childhood, and went to the Washington Normal School, from which she graduated in 1882 as a specialist in higher mathematics. She taught in the public schools until 1891, at which time she was in charge of the sixth grade school. That year she married Dr. Francis R. Lane, who was principal of the Central High School and afterward director of high schools in the city.

She was the author of numerous short stories and magazine articles and gained much fame by her book "The Mills of God." Her second book, "Society Stars," is considered by many to be even better than "The Mills of God." She wrote also "All for the Love of a Lady" and "How Delphine Won Out."

A new book, "Kathleen," has been printed by a New York publisher, who planned to put the book on sale tomorrow.

Mrs. Lane has lived abroad a great deal during the last ten years, and for four or five years the Lane family had no residence in Washington. She was well known in literary and dramatic circles in London and Paris.

She had a charming personality and her talents reflected a remarkable versatility. Music, painting and the study of languages divided her time when not engaged in her actual literary work. In addition to the great amount of fiction which she produced her verses in a voluminous vein have been familiar contributions to the leading periodicals.

YESTERDAY'S SOCIABILITIES AND SOME OF THE FUTURE.

Mrs. Dickinson Greets Many Old and New Friends—Many Events.

Following Mrs. Taft's example, who continues to receive callers by appointment after 5 each day, Mrs. Sherman, wife of the Vice President; Mrs. Knox, wife of the Secretary of State; and Mrs. Meyer, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, will receive tomorrow.

Mrs. Sherman will be at home until half-past 4, when she will leave to keep another engagement. The home of the Vice President is 1717 Massachusetts avenue.

Mrs. Knox will receive from 4 to 6. Mrs. Meyer, who has been away for a week in Boston, will also be at home tomorrow.

Mrs. Wickersham, wife of the Attorney General, is back at the New Willard after a short visit to her mother and is much occupied with the arrangement of her new home on 16th street. She will not, therefore, be able to see callers at present. Both Mrs. Ballinger, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, and Mrs. Nagel, wife of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, left here shortly after the inauguration. Secretary Nagel will combine both the public and family interest in his present visit to New York. He will meet there his eldest daughter, Miss Hildegard Nagel, who is going abroad, and who will return to her home in New York for a short visit.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Foster, so frequently identified with the history of social events, was thronged yesterday afternoon by their friends to meet the Secretary of War and Mrs. Dickinson, who have been their guests since their arrival last Friday. The occasion was, in fact, a reunion of many mutual friends of the hosts and the special guests, whose previous residence here began a social acquaintance to which their return in the official world is very welcome. Mrs. Foster, handsomely gowned in blue and white, and Mrs. Dickinson, in a blue and white gown, were a charming sight to the many guests who gathered to meet them. The occasion was a most valuable social acquisition to the new administration.

Mr. and Mrs. Dickinson of Seattle, Wash., son and daughter-in-law of Secretary and Mrs. Dickinson, who have been visiting relatives for several weeks, came over for the afternoon from that city for the tea.
